The symposium will examine changes and new directions in art criticism that have emerged with the shift in the prevailing artistic climate. With the globalisation of the last few years, we have observed the increasing importance attributed to curating, as an exercise in art criticism, as well as the rapid growth in the role of the internet, as a new medium, not only for communication, but for critical comment.

These changes derive logically from several related developments, starting with revisions in training and teaching methods practised in art schools and universities today, and the greater priority assigned to the new field of curatorial studies.

The current situation strongly reinforces a tendency to regard the exhibition as a performative medium, closely linked to a powerful economic system. This is also connected with the resurgence of interest in alternative, and often ephemeral, responses to the changing context of artistic creation. If art criticism is adequately to perform its task, it must respond to the realities of the new situation and attempt a better definition of its specific goals and systems of evaluation.

The symposium will be divided into two parts each day, from 16-19 October, inclusive:
- 9.30 a.m. to 2.30 p.m. Two round tables at the Instituto Cervantés, each involving a moderator and from 4 to 5 speakers
- 7.00 p.m. Lecture by a keynote speaker at a different public institution (Palais de Tokyo, Irish Cultural Centre, MACVAL, INHA/ Institut National d’Histoire de l’Art)

THURSDAY 19 OCTOBER
IV. New Orientations in Visual Arts and Cultural Studies
Today anyone training to become an artist is increasingly likely to feel the need to go to art school and, if possible, work for a degree at the postgraduate level. Art schools have become increasingly efficient in designing courses which cater to this need. Many art critics teach at the undergraduate and postgraduate level. But what importance do the schools themselves attach to the evaluation of work and working practices?
Moderator: Valérie Mavridorakis (France)
Round Table 1: The Role of the Critic in helping to train the Professional Artist.
Keynote speaker: Virginia MacKenny (South Africa),
Speakers: Mike Omoighe (Nigeria), Pavel Sedlak (Czech rep.), Joanna Winnicka-Gburek (Poland)
